

David Bergman, Architect

David Bergman runs a multidisciplinary design studio whose design approach emphasizes the transparent inclusion of sustainable/eco design principles to architecture, interiors and product design. David's designs have been acclaimed by The New York Times, Metropolis, ID, Wallpaper*, Architectural Record and many other publications.

Bergman teaches Sustainable Design courses at Parsons School of Design. He is currently working on "o2|e2: Ecodesign for Economic Growth," an exhibit and conference to promote the ecodesign sector in New York City.

David Bergman received a Master in Architecture from Princeton University, and a Bachelor of Arts in Architecture and Economics from Yale University. He is a New York State Registered Architect and a LEED Accredited Professional