

Michael Kuhndt, Head of UNEP/Wuppertal Institute Collaborating Centre on Sustainable Consumption and Production (CSCP), Germany

Mr Michael Kuhndt is the Head of the UNEP/Wuppertal Institute Collaborating Centre on Sustainable Consumption and Production (CSCP). As head of the CSCP, he coordinates the Centre's contribution towards the Marrakech process for implementing the 10-Year Framework of Programmes for Sustainable Consumption and Production. This involves consulting governments and international organisations on Sustainable Consumption and Production (SCP) and CSR policies. He presently directs projects in the fields of SCP and poverty reduction, total risk performance assessment and management, Corporate Social Responsibility and reporting, technology assessment, triple bottom line innovation management, sustainable consumption, product stewardship and the design of strategies based on multi-stakeholder approaches at company, product chain and sector level.

He has worked with or for a variety of organisations including UNEP, UNIDO, Worldbank, ILO, the European Commission, InWent, GTZ, the Global Reporting Initiative, the Global e-Sustainability Initiative and various other sector associations. Furthermore he work for different multinational companies, examples are: Barclays Bank, Canon, EMI, Hewlett Packard, Philip Morris, Matsushita and Motorola.

Michael Kuhndt studied chemical engineering and environmental management and policy in Germany, and Sweden. After gaining professional experience in the development and application of environmental and social information for management decisions at a German Bank and in the automobile sector, he worked for the European Commission for two years on linking environmental information demand and supply in industry and science. He was a senior consultant within the "Sustainable Production and Consumption Department" at the Wuppertal Institute and a permanent consultant at United Nations Environment Programme within the "Sustainable Consumption and Production" unit. He is founding director of triple innova, one of the leading German CSR research centre.

Michael Kuhndt is a German national.