University for the Creative Arts at Farnham

Falkner Road,
Farnham,
Surrey GU9 7DS
T +44 (0)1252 722441

By road - From the M25 follow the A3 past Guildford and then left onto the A31 signposted to Farnham and Alton. At the Shepherd and Flock roundabout carry straight on along the Farnham bypass (A31) to the next roundabout. From here, take the A325, which leads into West Street, towards the town centre. Turn left into The Hart. The main entrance to the University is at the junction with Falkner Road. Car parks are to the right. There is no parking available at UCA due to building works in progress.

From the South follow the directions above from the roundabout at the junction of the A31 and A325

By rail - Travel from London Waterloo to Farnham (via Woking). It is 15 minutes' walk from Farnham station to the University. Walk down Station Hill, cross the A31 and continue down South Street. Turn left into Union Road, which bears right into Downing Street. When you reach West Street, turn left and continue for 200 metres before turning right into The Hart. The University is at the top of this street.

Farnham History

Dating back tens of thousands of years, Farnham has a rich and colourful history. Archaeological evidence has been discovered of Farnham's occupations through the ages: from Roman potteries of 100 AD, to Iron Age hill forts, Bronze Age barrows and flint-knapping tools of the Neolithic age. However, Farnham's first mention in written history was at the hands of West Saxon King Caedwella when he donated the district surrounding the town to the Church. At the time of the Danish invasion in the 9th century (probably in 893 or 894) there was a major battle on the edge of the settlement (then called Fearnhamme meaning 'fern' and 'watermeadow') when Edward the Elder, son of Alfred the Great, routed the invaders. Farnham appears in Domesday Book of 1086 as Ferneham, one of the five great "minster" churches in Surrey. In 1128, William Giffard the Bishop of Winchester, founded the first Cistercian Monastery, Waverley Abbey, which is located about 2 miles south of the town centre. Despite being the first Cistercian abbey in England, records show the monks of Waverley having endured poverty and famine. However, the abbey did receive royal attention and was visited by King John and King Henry III. Its last royal visitor, King Henry VIII, was not warmly received: the King closed the abbey in 1536 as part of the dissolution of the monasteries, which was followed by its demolition. Ruins of the abbey can still be seen today and are open to the public as part of the English Heritage.

At a similar time to the construction of Waverley Abbey, Henry de Blois, grandson of William the Conqueror, began building Farnham Castle to accommodate the Bishops of Winchester during his travels to and from London. Farnham's strategic positioning between London, Winchester and the coast created perfect trading conditions and opportunities.

In the 17th century, Farnham oversaw a booming cereal and wool trade and later, in the 18th century the growth of hops became the main attraction; once the most expensive in England, they guaranteed the towns prosperity. Due to the castle, its occupants and its positioning, Farnham received further royal guests including King James I and Queen Elizabeth I as well as King Charles I. It is said that Charles rode through town at dawn on November 12th seeking sanctuary at Vernon House after escaping custody. After military escort removed him, the King made a second journey back through Farnham but this time it was en route to his trial and execution in London. Before his departure, King Charles I bestowed his morning cap, made of blue silk, gold, and silver threadwork, to his host Sir Henry Vernon as a thanks for his hospitality, which can now be seen in the Museum of Farnham.

Since the 18th and 19th century, Farnham has become a very wealthy market town, with Daniel Defoe having written that Farnham had 'the greatest corn-market outside of London'. Not just a market town, Farnham was also home to John Henry Knight, a wealthy engineer, inventor and the first man to receive a driving prosecution. Another contributor to daily life was William Willet, whose tireless promotion of British Summertime aided in the passing of the 1925 Summer Time Act. One of Farnham's most famous sons was the motor racing legend Mike Hawthorn, who was Formula 1 World Champion in 1958. He was tragically killed in a crash on the 'Hogs Back' road between Farnham and Guildford in 1959 aged just 29, and is buried in Farnham Cemetery.

Since the arrival of the railway in 1848 and the presence of the Army in Aldershot, Farnham has grown evermore. With its population doubling over the past 100 years, Farnham is now a thriving commuter town.

Visitor Information and Useful Links

Farnham Park

Farnham Park is a remarkable survival of a medieval deer park with a landscape of rolling grassland and veteran trees and a boundary that has remained unchanged for over 600 years. Its 320 acres (130 hectares) has retained much of its 17th parkland character and has the feel of open countryside. It offers avenues, hidden dells, hills, valleys, ponds and streams. Its elevated position provides panoramic views of Farnham and surrounding countryside.

Bourne Wood

Bourne Wood (also known as Bourne Woods) is an area of predominantly coniferous woodland just south of Farnham, Surrey, England and a film location. Locally it was known as the Clumps, and was called this until the forestry commission changed the name in the 1950s when fire breaks were introduced, Charles Darwin may have written about the area in Appendices of Natural Selection-describing the trees in clumps. A promontory (rise) above a large heathland clearing (made for the filming of Gladiator) provides views over the surrounding woodland.
